Steamboat Disaster.

NEW YORK, June 28. The steamboat Seawanhawkas, which ran from Peck slip up the sound to Glencove, Long Island, took fire at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon, while off Randall's Island, East River. The fire was caused by an explosion in the engine room and the middle of the steamboat was soon in flames.

Charles Hasbrouck who was employed on the boat says we had a crew of four deck hands, one deck boy, an engineer, two firemen, captain, clerk, superintendent, wheelman, superintendent's clerk, porter, steward and cook. The crew did their duty like men and few of them lost their presence of mind. You can imagine how cool they were, when the clerk who was collecting fares as soon as he realized the boat was on fire returned to the office and secured all the money he had left there

Among the passengers were Chas. A. Dana, Richard G. Gorman, S. L. M. Barlow, one or two of Harpers publishers and a number of other gentlemen whose names I can't recollect, but who were in the habit of going to their homes on Long Island shore by our boat. Five of the gentlemen I have the names of escaped. The vessel burned like powder after the flames started Shrieking women and children huddled aft until their clothes caught fire, and those on the forward part of the boat were men who were cut off from communicating or going to the rescue of their female relatives and friends by the flames which burnt about the center of the boat.

Mr. Morris, our porter, saw a child floating on its back and was going to jump over to save it, when a frantic woman clutched his pants, saying, "you are a strong man and I a woman without friends on board, for God's sake help me." The porter left the child and saved the woman. Only one of Seawanhawkus' boats got out. It was one which had a canvas festooned over it. The canvas was got off. The body of a child about two years of age was found lying in the water in the bottom of the boat. Nobody seemed to know how it got there After I got on the stand, I was almost exhausted, but the doctors revived me by pouring liquor down my throat. I reached this city on the Sylvan Glen which also had several of our passengers on board. Other passengers were taken on board the Osseo, Granite State and Minnehannock and were carried to the destinations of those boats. A lady was climbing down the ladder leading from the promenade deck to the main deck, but as the ladder is a pretty hard thing for a man to get down at any time, she fell into the gangway amid the flames Myself and four or five others rescued her from her perilous position. I saw a butcher who belongs either at Great Neck or Sands Point, grab up an asparagus box and before I could stop him, jumped overboard with it. I yelled at him not to jump, or he would be struck by the wheel. He did not heed me, and went over forward. The last I saw of him he was going under the wheel. Several others who went over forward also went under the paddle wheels.

The Eastern Bound boat club ground East 121 street is right opposite the scene of the disaster. Some dozen members were present at the time and gathered a number of neighbors, manned all the boats of the club and hired others at adjacent floats These all went across the river and brought about forty persons to the club house who were burned about the body, hands and face. The wounds of these parties were dressed and clothes given them. Those who were not able to go home were taken to the homeopathic hospital.

Mr. V. Lopez, a passenger who lives at Sea Cliff, but does business in this city, was rescued with a young lady named Ida Belle Smith. Mr. Lopez said that the steamer left the dock at East River at 4.15 in the afternoon. A stop was made at 33d, where 75 or 100 additional passengers were taken aboard. Just about Hell Gate several went forward to see some friends. As I looked back I saw the flames coming up through the coal hole. I made my way to the bow of the steamer and held out as long as I could and then in company with Miss Smith jumped overboard, after furnishing her with a preserver. The life boats of the ship were not lowered because it was impossible to lower them. The captain of the steamer stood at his post till the last moment. I even saw him turn his head, while at the wheel, to avoid the flames. He would have run the boat in towards the island but the ropes connecting with the rudder were burned off.

Charles Smith, captain of the vessel, was found in the hospital on Randall's Island, suffering from severe burns. He said about 4.30 he heard a low, dull report or explosion. As quick as thought I turned to see what was the matter, when I saw the vessel afire midship. I saw the steamer Granite still on my starboard side. Finding that my steamer was on fire I immediately headed her for the shore and with a full head of steam, although the engineer had been driven from his post. I landed her about forty feet upon the meadows. Most of the passengers were on the bow of the vessel and those at the stern were at the mercy of the flames, as all passengers on the bow were cut off. Many jumped on land while others jumped into the water. I stood at the wheel until the last minute and then jumped overboard and was picked by a small boat. We had no freight on board and I don't know what caused the explosion. The vessel can carry 1300 persons, but Monday is generally a dull day and we had only 250 or 300 on board this afternoon. The engineer of the vessel and his son, who was the fireman, were at their posts at the time of the fire. The fireman explains that some of the tubes of the boiler must have burst, throwing the furnace-doors open and scattering the coals around, and set fire to the vessel. He like his father was driven from his post by the flames. Both escaped with some burns. The number of lives lost by the accident can't be learned. As the steamer is merely a daily transport between near points, it kept no register. Its not likely that the number of lost will reach 50. At midnight 12 bodies, 9 adults, 1 child and 2 babies were brought to the morgue at Bellevine hospital. A number of persons who had relatives and friends on the vessel were waiting to identify them, if among the unfortunate.

Dr. McDonald, chief of staff of the Lunatic asylum, Ward's Island, said he was sitting on the roof this afternoon about 4 30, when he saw a steamer come up the river all on fire. The steamer passed the island, He saw it was the same. The fire appeared to be just forward of the paddle wheel and the steamer turned in as if to Long Island, but suddenly turned out again. She was going at full speed. At that time there were about five hundred patients in grounds and most of them had seen the burning steamer. They made a rush for the river and fell in line to witness the sight. The orderlies of the institution were sent out and all insane persons were safely placed in their rooms. The doctor took all the necessary articles from the apothecary, and at once went to the scene of the accident. By this time the steamer had been run upon the sunken meadow and was all ablaze. Women and children were jumping from the vessel. The doctor ordered his private boat out and everything possible was done to relieve the passengers on board the unfortunate steamer.

Severe Charge against a Railroad

CHICAGO, June 28 The Journal's New York special says Barrymore, the actor, said to a reporter, I want to be put on record as saying that in my opinion the Texas Pacific railroad officials are responsible for the murder of Porter, Currie was a well known desperado and murderer and they hired him as engine driver. When his drunken habits prevented his being put in charge of an engine, he was discharged, but Superintendent Noble took him under his wing and made him special detective for the company and supplied him with fire arms. It looks as if they encouraged their employes to shoot down in cold blood in their own depots, persons who support their line. I have also heard that the funds necessary to the defense of the murderer were also supplied by officials of this same company.

About Mr. English.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—New York Sun, that wonderful journal for correspondents that hence materialize in vicinity where they are reputed to be has what purports to be special dispatch from Indianapolis explaining charge made in these columns that Mr. English gave only one dollar to the sufferers of Chicago fire. Alleged correspondent says that amount of subscription was printed in local paper at time a typographical error made it appear one dollar instead of one hundred dollars as it actually was This explanation of very troublesome matter is considered very clever but not so ingenious in minds of Indianapolis gentlemen here as that English himself. He found that he made himself rather conspicuous for meanness and few days after occurrence, said that reason he gave one dollar was because he thought it was for some particular case and not for general relief fund. Public is offered both explanations and can take their choice. It's said further that at time English made his explanation he promised to make another donation of fifty dollars but is not known whether he did so or not.

WHITTAKER'S PROTOTYPE.

How Daniel Webster Exposed a Man who Shot Himself Through the Hand After Robbing Himself on the Highway

A curious light is thrown on the case of Whittaker by a story which Mr Curtis tells in his life of Webster of the alleged robbery and wounding of Major Goodridge, of Massachusetts, sixty years ago, as investigated and exposed by Mr. Webster. Mr Curtis's narrative is so clear and interesting that we reproduce it in his own words:

Goodridge was a person of previous good character and respectable standing, who professed to have been robbed of a large sum of money at about nine o'clock in the night of December 19, 1816, on the road between Exeter and Newburyport, soon after passing the Essex Merrimac Bridge on his way from New Hampshire into Massachusetts. Among the proofs of the robbery was a pistol shot through his left hand, received, as he said, before the robbers pulled him from his horse, he and one of his assailants discharging their pistols at each other at the same instant. He was then, according to his account, dragged from his horse and across a fence into a field, robbed and beaten until he was senseless. On his recovery he went back to the toll house on the bridge, where he appeared to be for a time in a state of delirium. But he had sufficient self-possession to return to the place of the robbery with some persons who accompanied him with a lantern, where his watch, papers and other articles were found scattered on the ground. On the following day he went to Newburyport and remained there ill, at intervals in a state of real or simulated frenzy, for several weeks. Having regained his health he set about the discovery of the robbers; and so general was the sympathy for him in a very orderly community that his plans were aided by the innocent zeal of nearly the whole country side. His first charge was against the Kennistons, two poor men who dwelt in the town of New Market, N. H, on the other side of the river. In their cellar he found a piece of gold which he identified by a mark which he said he placed on all his money, and a $10 note which he also identified as his own. The Kennistons were arrested, examined and held for trial. He next charged the toll gatherer, one Pearson, as an accomplice; and on his premises with the aid of a witch-hazel conjurer he also found some of his gold and papers in which it had been wrapped. Pearson was arrested, examined before two magistrates and discharged. Goodridge then complained against one Taber, a person who lived in Boston. Finally he followed a man named Jackman to the city of New York, in whose house he swore that he had discovered some of his marked wrappers. The machinery of an executive requisition was put in motion and Jackman was brought into Massachusetts and lodged in jail He and Taber and the Kennistons were then indicted for robbery in the county of Essex So cunningly had this man contrived his story that the popular belief was entirely with him The witch-hazel of his evidence probably did not disincline the populace to believe him. But it is even said that there were few members of the county bar who did not regard the case of the Kennistons as desperate. There were some, however, who believed Goodridge's story to be false, and these persons sent for Mr. Webster to undertake the defense of the accused. The indictment against Taber was nol. prossed. That against the Kennistons came on for trial at Ipswich in April, 1817. They had nothing on which to rely but their previous good character and the negative fact that since the supposed robbery they had not passed any money nor were seen to have any, and improbabilities with which their advocate could develop in the story of Goodridge. The theory of the defense was that Goodridge was his own robber and had fired the pistol shot through his hand.

In the power of cross examining witnesses Mr Webster had no superior of the day, and his reputation in this respect doubtless aided the impression which he produced upon the jury.

There were traditions which had come over the border from New Hampshire, of his terrible skill in baffling the deepest plans of perjury and fraud, which excited the jury to the closest attention to his method of dealing with Goodridge. They saw his well concocted story laid bare in all its improbable features, while every aid was given to him by Mr Webster to develop suggestions which could be set off against the theory that the latter meant to maintain. But when all the evidence for and against Goodridge's narrative had been drawn out, and it came to the summing up, there remained two obvious difficulties in the way of that hypothesis. One of them was that no motive had been shown for so strange an act as a man's falsely pretending to have been robbed and charging the robbery upon innocent people; the other that the theory of Goodridge being himself a robber apparently made it necessary to believe that he had proceeded in this fraudulent manufacture of proofs to the extremity of shooting a pistol bullet through his own hand. These were very formidable difficulties, for the law of evidence, as administered in our criminal jurisprudence, very properly regards the absence of motive for an act, the commission of which depends on circumstantial proof, as one of the important things to be weighed in favor of innocence; and as to the shooting, it was certainly in a high degree improbable that a man would maim himself in order to maintain a false statement that he had been robbed and maimed by some one else. But in grappling with these difficulties Mr Webster told the jury that the range of human motives is almost infinite; that a desire to avoid payment of his debts if he owed debts, or whimsical ambition for distinction, might have been at the bottom of Goodridge's conduct, and that having once announced himself to a community as a man who had been robbed of a large sum and beaten nearly to death, he had to go on and charge somebody with the act. This was correct reasoning; but still no motive had been shown for the original pretence; and if there had not been some decisive circumstances developed on the evidence it is not easy to see how this case ought to have been decided. These circumstances make it necessary to believe that, although Goodridge had himself discharged the pistol which wounded him, he intended that ——— it. His story was that the pistol of the robber went off at the moment when he grasped it with his left hand Yet according to the testimony of the physicians who attended him there were no marks of powder upon his hand; and the appearance of the hand led to the conclusion that the muzzle of the pistol must have been three or four feet from his hand, while there were marks of powder on the sleeve of his coat, and the ball passed through the coat as well as the hand

This state of evidence justified Mr Webster's remark that "All exhibitions are subject to accidents, whether serious or farcical they do not always proceed exactly as they ought to do." Goodridge, he argued, intended to shoot the ball through his coat sleeve, and it accidentally perforated his hand also.

Goodridge, however, returned to the charge Jackman was put on trial at the next term of the court and the jury disagreed. At his second trial Mr. Webster defended him and he was acquitted These criminal proceedings were followed by an action for malicious persecution, instituted by Pearson against Goodridge Mr. Webster was of counsel for the plaintiff in this case The evidence was now still as to clear against Goodridge; a verdict for a large sum was recovered against him, and the public at last saw the fact judicially established that he had robbed himself. He left New England a disgraced man; but no clue to his motive was ever discovered.

Twenty years afterwards Mr. Webster was travelling in the western part of the state of New York; he stopped at a tavern and went in to ask for a glass of water The man behind the counter exhibited great agitation as the traveller approached him, and when he placed the glass of water before Mr Webster his hand trembled violently, but he did not speak. Mr Webster drank the water, turned without saying another word and re entered his carriage, The man was Goodridge.

THE FORGERY.

The following speech published by the News as delivered by General Garfield is a forgery. It has already been accepted by some of the readers of the News as genuine, we therefore brand it as counterfeit, as we would brand a counterfeit bank note to prevent its further circulation. The News has a standing invitation to show this is not a forgery by giving the volume and page of the Congressional Record on which it can be found. The speech counterfeited and forged by the News is as follows:

"The erasure of the clause in the statutes authorizing silver coinage WAS A MISTAKE, and was wholly unintentional ON MY PART. I regret it because my colleagues would not have consented to it, and any act unauthorized by a majority of the committee could not be maintained on principles of justice and fairness. But now that silver has been dropped from the coinage it would be A WRONG UPON THE PEOPLE CREDITOR TO RESTORE IT. I shall oppose the bill introduced by the chairman of the committee on currency and banking for that reason and that reason only. Extract from Garfield's speech on the "Buckner bill."

The Pueblo Banner is for Hancock and English.

The Denver News has not forged any of Garfield's speeches for a week.

The News still declines to name the page and volume of the Congressional Record in which Garfield's forged speech may be found.

The democrats, by their efforts to make capital out of the declaration of martial law, make the republican party the law and order party.

Democratic papers emphasize Hancock's record in Louisiana after the war too much. The country is most grateful to him for having fought against the south.

If the democrats wish the Denver News to help the party, it should order that its policy be controlled from Leadville by the Democrat, and also that the News should publish on all important events the editorials of the Democrat, telegraphed from Leadville.

The reception that was to have been given to General Grant in Denver, before the Chicago convention, should by all means take place just the same now. He is as good a man as he ever was, and being the first reception since the convention, it should for obvious reasons be particularly hearty. [Denver Times.

We believe in this heartily. General Grant is the first citizen of the republic, and Colorado will honor herself in honoring him.

The nomination of Hancock is an admission at the outset that democratic conduct during the war was wrong. The party said the war was a failure and a mistake. It don't want this thrown up in its face, so it nominated a leader whose course was opposite to that of the party that nominated him. Any democrat voting for Hancock virtually says the democratic party was mistaken and unpatriotic all through the war. Will honest democrats admit this? Many would not when Greeley was a candidate.

Hancock was not nominated by the democratic party because he fought against the democratic rebellion, but in spite of it. He was nominated by the democrats because he was a men tool of the rebel element in the south in the reconstruction period. What he fought against their getting on the battle field, he voluntarily gave to them in the council chamber. This was not because Hancock was not patriotic, but because he was not wise. The democrats now think that his war record will aid them in getting into power, and that then they can use him as they used him in Louisiana.

FOSSETT'S COLORADO

We have just received the revised edition of Fossett's Colorado. The edition published in 1879 was by far the most complete book published on Colorado, and it deserved the great sale it had. But the new edition is a great improvement on the old one. The book has been thoroughly revised so that nearly half of it is new matter. The last 160 pages is almost entirely new matter. Colorado's progress is so rapid that such a book reads like ancient history when only a year old. The new chapters are devoted to the Gunnison country, Summit and Custer counties, and San Juan. The book is quite accurate and reliable. Mr. Fossett has always had a genius for statistics. For years he has worked laboriously and industriously, gathering facts about Colorado. The results of this faithful work is this book. It is not a second-hand compilation of facts, but, as the reader will readily see, is the result of original investigation. We are glad to recommend this book to any of our readers who desire to possess a carefully prepared history of Colorado, together with an admirable statement of her mineral wealth and development.

That old democratic war horse, General Brown, did not shine at Cincinnati as he usually does in a Colorado democratic convention. The Cincinnati Enquirer (democratic) after speaking of Field's nomination by Mr. M'Elrath of California, gives the following rather crushing description of the oratorical effort of "our orator." "Weak applause followed, when, as if the Fates had conspired against him, another even worse speaker took the stand, and proceeded to second Field's nomination. This gentleman had a miserable appearance, a bad voice, and a remarkable lack of grace. After he had awkwardly fumbled around in the dictionary for five or ten minutes, the convention, concluding that it had heard enough, requested him to "Sit down," "Pull down his vest," and made various other suggestions of a like character, which, however, only had the effect of irritating the old fellow, who slipped up his sleeves and casting a defiant glance at the galoots in the gallery who were guying him, proceeded, when the noise had to some extent subsided, to pump more of the oratorical wind off his stomach. The convention stood this for only a few minutes, and then the confusion became so great that nothing from the stand could be heard, and in the midst of the hubbub the old gentleman, after whispering the closing paragraph of his speech into the ear of the chairman, withdrew."

Business men will hesitate to vote for Hancock not simply because he is without experience as a civil officer, but because of the party which supports him. The democratic party has no record which will lead business men to expect a good administration even if a good man is at the head. The party has been anything to get into power. When greenbackism was popular, the democratic party was the party of soft money. It has controlled both branches of congress since March 4, 1879. During this time it has passed no bill of interest to the country. Outside of appropriation bills, it has devoted its entire time to purely partisan legislation. It has cared for the party rather than the country. This is shown in the various methods resorted to to secure a repeal of the election laws. The only motive in securing their repeal is to aid the democratic party to carry elections by fraud. The country has watched this legislation and will condemn the party for it this fall. Important legislation like the bill for funding the public debt, the revision of the tariff laws, laws relating to the electoral count, and much other legislation of vital importance to the country has been wholly neglected. The party has not shown the least capacity for governing the country. It has legislated wholly in the interest of the party with the ultimate object to obtain control of the country.

A Display of Taste.

When we sell "our mines" and clean up generally, we are going to Colorado Springs to open out a red hot democratic paper. El Paso county is a good field for a plain spoken missionary. [Solid Muldoon.

Party Records.

The democratic party for the last twenty-five years has been a party of corruption and disloyalty, and it cannot point to a single redeeming feature in its record of all that time. The republican party can "point with pride to its glorious record of the past," and on that line the battle should be fought. Its platform of universal freedom and the equality of all before the law is broad and comprehensive enough to carry the day as against democracy and its old slavery record and its later record of election frauds north and south.—Mountain Mail.

Chairman of the State Committee.

Hon. Henry Wolcott is being mentioned by some of the state papers in connection with the chairmanship of the State Central committee. Mr. Wolcott is a stalwart republican and a strong-brained, clear-headed man, and he would conduct the canvass with credit. We doubt, however, if he wants the place. General Hamill has also been frequently spoken of, his brilliant campaign in 1878 being still fresh in the minds of the party. If Hamill would take it nothing would be left undone during the fall fight. Of Governor Routt there are conflicting reports, but, as things look now, he is working for George Clark, of Leadville. The Herald, of Leadville, has declared for Hamill. [Denver Tribune.

A Distinguished American.

Mr. Labouchere's Paris correspondent writes: "A personal friend of King George of Greece, and a quiet and efficacious promoter here of the Greek cause, General Meredith Read, started last night for London. The General was for some time United States Minister at Athens. King George lost no time on arriving here in calling on General and Mrs. Meredith Read, one of the most sparkling and original nieces of Uncle Sam that it has ever been my happiness to meet. She has the American lady's taste for refinement and for pretty things. Her conversation fizzes over with mother wit, which comes in sudden dashes, and with the accompaniment of sweet, silvery laughter. The General has a unique collection of old manuscripts, autographs of celebrated persons, prints and rare books, and has just got hold of a bundle of worm eaten letters, written more than 300 years ago, and of considerable human and historical interest. They were written with a sharply pointed pen, and describe a courtship by proxy of a vain old woman, resolved to be beautiful forever. The writer was a French Ambassador, the recipient of his letters a sly female politician, Catherine de Medici; the amorous hag, Queen Elizabeth, and the gallant who made up to her by proxy, the Duc d'Alencon."

St. Paul Preferred.

When the sudden rise
Took the "bears" by surprise,
My grandfather came from the West;
He had sold all his grain,
And came to explain,
How the proceeds he wished to invest.
As the crop must be moved,
It was readily proved,
That "St. Paul" was the stock he should buy.
He heard the "preferred" would sail up like a bird;
So he took in a "thou." for a fly.

Then he learned that the rain
Had so damaged the grain
That the crop was alarmingly small;
And 'twas easy to show
That when "rates" were so low
It was best to get out of "St. Paul."
He was privately told
The directors had sold
On the "later advices" that day—
"We get here as yet no let up in the wet;"
So he sold his stock in dismay.

Then 'twas further explained
That so long as it rained
The stock must keep falling in price;
So he pulled down his vest
And disposed of the rest,
And waited for further advice.
Then "bonds," he was told,
Had been secretly sold
To the tune of a million or more,
Yet 'twas but that the "debt" was a frightful one yet;
So he put out a "thou." "seller-four."

Then lo! it appeared
That the weather had cleared,
And the crop was the best ever known;
The directors were "long,"
And the stock was so strong
That it rose on its own "undertone;"
Then his broker was told
To take in what he'd sold;
While my grandfather crawled out of town.
But when the stock was sent in "cash" at a quarter past 2 o'clock the broker discovered that his margin had run out, so
"He 'stopped' when the old man 'laid down.'"

A ROYAL ROMANCE.

How Prince Albert Came A-Wooing and Won The Young Queen of England.

It was in October of the year 1839 that the two young Coburg princes came to England. They brought with them a letter from King Leopold, which ran as follows:

MY DEAREST VICTORIA: Your cousins themselves will be the bearers of these lines. I recommend them to you. They are good and honest creatures, deserving your kindness not pedantic, but really sensible and trustworthy. I have told them that your great wish is that they should be quite at their ease with you.

The young men arrived. Their cousin, no longer the little girl of Kensington in the lonely, old fashioned house, but a great queen, received them at the top of the royal staircase, amidst all the magnificence of Windsor Castle, as if these two wandering knights had been emperors. But after this grand reception the commonest of incidents brings back the prince travelers and the royal circle into the sympathy of homelier life. The portmanteaus, it is to be supposed, had gone astray, as happens to many of us or at least did not arrive in time and the dinner hour was near. "Their clothes not having arrived," the queen writes in her journal, "they could not appear at dinner, but came in after it, in spite of the morning clothes." There was a circle of visitors assembled, and no doubt some little tremor in the air—wonderings and whisperings and close watchings of all the looks and words interchanged between the cousins. Prince Albert was now full grown, in all the freshness of twenty, the age at which a handsome youth is handsomest, before any of the bloom has rubbed off. "There was in his countenance a gentleness of expression, and a peculiar sweetness in his smile, with a look of deep thought and high intelligence in his clear blue eyes and expansive forehead that added a charm to the effect he produced in those who saw him, far beyond that derived from mere regularity or beauty of features." He was as good as he was handsome, full of high purpose and most delicate conscientiousness.

And the life in the beautiful old castle in those mellow autumn days was gay and bright as heart could desire. The head of the house was young and light-hearted, the visitors all proud and happy to contribute to her amusement and to keep the palace gay. The way of life in Windsor during the stay of the princes was much as follows: "The queen breakfasting in her own room, they afterward paid her a visit there, and at two o'clock had luncheon with her and the Duchess of Kent. In the afternoon they all rode, the queen and duchess and the two princes, with Lord Melbourne and most of the ladies and gentlemen in attendance, forming a large cavalcade. There was a great dinner every evening, with a dance after it three times a week." The pleasant reaction went on for a week. The brothers had arrived on the 8th, Prince Albert and Queen Victoria being then both of a mind (to believe their own statements) that the tacit understanding between them was over, and they would not marry—not they—for years to come. But before the 15th had come something had changed the notions of the young pair. Yet the wooing was not all easy and plain before them, as before other pairs. These were not the days in which any noble knight, even a prince, would address a queen. What had to be told must be said by her, not by him—a strange necessity. But no doubt it seems a more difficult matter in talking of it than it was in the doing of it. When the young prince was summoned alone to the young sovereign's presence no doubt the first glance, the first word, was enough to tell him that his cause was won. "After a few minutes' conversation the Queen told him why she had sent for him." A happy mist falls over all that was said and done. When the young pair emerge from it and are seen again of ordinary men, there is a maze of gladness about them which finds expression in the same words all unawares: "These last few days have passed like a dream to me, and I am so much bewildered by it all that I know hardly how to write, but I do feel very happy," writes the Queen to her uncle—he to whom this good news would be so welcome. And, "More I can't write to you, for at this moment I am too bewildered," says the Prince on his side, pulling, as became him, a holder note and throwing his rapture and happiness into the words of the poet:

"Das Auge sieht den Himmeloffen,
Es schwimmt das Herz in Seligkeit."

"Upon the eyes heaven opens bright,
The heart is flooded with delight."

All this charming little idyl is told to us by the chief actor in it, the Queen herself, in the fullness of her heart, and the wonderful humility and simplicity with which she throughout puts herself in the secondary place is one of the most remarkable exhibitions of womanly nature that ever was revealed to the world. "How I will strive to make him feel as little as possible the great sacrifice he has made," she says in her journal, noting down the events of that wonderful day. "I told him it was a great sacrifice on his part, but he would not allow it."

Literary Recluses.

Mr. Ryan, Librarian of the Kilkenny Library Society, made books his idols, denying himself every luxury and not a few necessaries in order to add to his collection; the well-furnished library of which he was the custodian being insufficient to satisfy his literary cravings. He lived in the upper part of the society's premises, but admitted no one to enter his rooms for any purpose whatever. On his sudden death, in 1866, their privacy was perforce invaded. His bedroom, or what passed for such, was found to contain nothing in the way of furniture save an old sofa, which had served him for a bed, upon which lay a pair of blankets, his sole nightly covering. Piles of books were heaped up promiscuously in every direction. So in his sitting room, there was scarcely space to move for dust covered volumes, of which the owner had apparently made very little use contented, like many another collector, with merely having acquired them.

A wealthy eccentric, living in a French provincial town, was not open to that reproach. He dwelt alone, in a secluded house, admitting no one but a char-woman, who prepared his meals, and a newsman, agent, who brought him thirty or forty journals at a time. One day even they could not obtain admission, and the police were called upon to intervene. Upon entering the solitary bedroom in the house a room as squalid as it could be—the recluse was found dead on the bed, which could only be reached by passing through a ravine, the sides of which were composed of thousands of newspapers and novels, whose perusal had been the sole delight and occupation of his wasted life. [Chambers' Journal.

A Notable Ascot Dress.

There was a costume in the inclosure that attracted universal attention, which, so far as material was concerned, might have been worn by a Genoese grand lady in the fairest century of mediaeval dress. I say nothing about the form of the costume, that is governed by fashion; but the material was irreproachable. The dress was pure white from top to toe, and consisted of a rich white velvet pattern applied upon white satin, shaped somewhat like a long coat with just a few inches of white dress shown beneath it; the head-covering was also white, round which ran one violet streak that with consummate art relieved the monotony of so bridal an attire. But even then it was difficult to refuse the prize of taste to an ivory-white satin, over which hung a berthe of white bugles, and an apron of the same glistening adornment. The harmony of the ivory satin with the heavy sheen of these bugles was admirable enough, and came with welcome relief after a preponderance of black beads and jets. [London Telegraph.

The New Palace of San Donato

I gave you recently an account (it was intentionally far from a full account) of the distress into which Prince Pierre Bonaparte's family had fallen. They are again on fortune's crested wave. Roland Bonaparte is to marry a daughter of Blanc, the farmer of the gaming tables of Baden and Monaco, who, beside the fortune to his children, left his widow $30,000,000. Roland Bonaparte is to marry her daughter. He has bought San Donato, Prince Demidoff's place near Florence. The king of Italy, at Prince Napoleon's request, has given him the title of Prince of San Donato. The estate of San Donato contains seventy-five acres; the palace has a marble terrace and gilded dome; has stables for fifty horses; coach house for thirty carriages; a riding school; hot, temperate and cold green-houses; orangeries; green-houses for orchids; a conservatory 400 yards long; pigeon-shooting lawn, steam baths, Turkish baths, Russian baths; is lighted by gas; has lawns, lakes, bridges, islands, aviaries, grottos, swimming school, of 1,600 cubic yards, orchards, olive groves, kitchen garden, vineyard, dairy. Mad. Blanc has paid $200,000 for it.

The family of Roland are of course delighted. His sister will no longer try to get bread by sculpture, and he will no longer look forward eagerly to the $20 ban knote which Prince Napoleon sent him occasionally. [Paris letter to New Orleans Picayune.

He went into a prominent drug store and said to the dentist: "You pulls out mitout pain?"
"Certainly."
"What does dot cost?"
"One dollar."
"Py shimminy you dinks dot don't hurt none, py gracious!" [San Antonio Herald.

Not an Uncommon Form of Heroism.

Quite a number of darkies, young and old, were fishing down on Kuhn's wharf yesterday, when a boy about twelve fell off, and would have met with a watery grave had it not been for the energy and presence of mind of old Uncle Moses. After the boy was safely landed a bystander took occasion to praise old Moses for the heroism he had displayed.

"Is the boy your son?" asked the sympathetic bystander.

"No, boss, he might jess as well a been. He had all the bait in his pocket."—[Galveston News.

The grading of the Colorado Springs and Manitou railroad is nearly completed.

Frank Fossett's new edition of his book "Colorado" is for sale at the book store of Messrs. E. P. Howbert & Co.

Messrs. E. P. Howbert & Co. have just put in their store a handsome cigar case of home manufacture. It is the work of Mr. Fred Ege.

The road to Manitou presents an especially animated appearance when the railroad men are going to their work or returning from their work.

The Willard Bros. who own extensive sheep ranches on Running creek, have concluded to remove their herds to Kansas where they will locate permanently.

The old tent which occupied the vacant lots on Tejon street, north of the postoffice, has been removed preparatory to the commencement of work for the new opera house.

If those twenty antelope advertised for this morning are delivered at Bacon's livery stable, the genial proprietor will not be able to sing with the poet: "I never nursed a dear gazell, etc."

The concert of the Congregational church choir will be given next week, probably Thursday evening. It was the intention to give the concert to-morrow evening but owing to the illness of two of the singers the concert has been postponed a week.

The Plunkett Constellation finished their season of entertainments in this city last evening. Carrie Plunkett, benefited by the occasion, appeared as Armande Chandoce, in Led Astray. The audience was a large one and Mrs. Plunkett's efforts were received with tokens of approval.

Mr. C. F. Todd has leased the butcher shop recently occupied by Mr. W. H. Kettlewell on Pike's Peak avenue. He was formerly in business on Tejon street where he kept one of the best meat markets in the city, and he will no doubt reclaim many of his old patrons at his new stand.

A campaign glee club has been organized to canvass the state for Garfield and Arthur. The members of this club are known to be among the best singers in the state and we are sure their efforts will meet with success. They have a number of original campaign songs which will no doubt become very popular.

LAYING THE CORNER STONE.

St. Andrew's Mission Church of Manitou.

The laying of the corner stone of St. Andrew's Mission Church, of Manitou, yesterday afternoon, attracted a large number of interested spectors and devout participants. The service was most appropriate and impressive.

The comfortable tent, which is to be used as a church until the edifice of St. Andrews is erected, was made the starting point of the procession, which headed by the Sunday school children and followed by the members of the church and the clergy marched to the corner stone chanting the very appropriate hymn beginning,

> "Onward Christian soldiers
> Marching as to war,
> With the cross of Jesus
> Going on before."

When the corner stone was reached the bishop, with the rector of Grace church of this city, the Rev. Mr. Coburn, of the diocese of New York, and the minister in charge of the mission grouped themselves about it and the bishop led the responsive service. At the conclusion of this service the choir and audience joined in singing "Glory be to the Father," after which the bishop offered prayer. A responsive service was then read concluding with the words from the book of Ezra:

And all the people shouted with a great shout when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid.

The choir then sang the hymn so especially appropriate under the circumstances beginning;

> "O Lord of hosts, whose glory fills
> The bounds of the eternal hills,
> And yet vouchsafes, in Christian lands,
> To dwell in temples made with hands."

The rector, the Rev. G. T. Le Boutillier, then read the inscription upon the corner stone and made notice of the deposits therein, after which the stone was laid in place under the direction of the wardens and building committee. After the stone was in place the bishop struck it three times with a hammer and repeated the words provided for such occasions. The choir then sang "The Churche's one Foundation," following which the credo was recited.

Bishop Spalding delivered a brief but very appropriate address on the happy occasion and announced that after the offertory, the principal address would be delivered by the Rev. Mr. Coburn, of the diocese of New York.

When the offertory had been received the reverend gentleman from the diocese of New York began an address of much ability and eloquence, but to the great regret of his hearers, was compelled to close by the threatening aspect of the sky, from which large drops of rain occasionally fell. The recessional was sung and the procession returned from whence it came.

Kind Words at Parting.

We find the following notice in the Hamilton Spectator of the departure of Mr. John Clayton from his home in Ontario to make Colorado Springs his place of residence:

"Last evening a few of the friends of Mr. John Clayton, assembled at James' Restaurant on Hughson street to spend a couple of hours with him prior to his departure for Colorado. Although the occasion was one which called up some regretful feelings, these were not allowed to gain prominence, and altogether a very pleasant time was spent.

"At the proper time Mr. Thos. Mason, who occupied the chair, performed the pleasing duty of presenting Mr. Clayton with a handsome gold jewel on behalf of his friends in the St. George's society, accompanying it with a brief and appropriate speech. He alluded in laudatory terms to the valuable service rendered by Mr. Clayton as a member of St. George's, and wished him every prosperity in his new sphere of life.

"Mr. Clayton thanked the gentlemen present in a very neat speech, in which he expressed himself as very sorry at leaving Hamilton, where he had many warm frinds whom he would never forget.

"The jewel had engraved on it the following inscription:

"'Presented to John Clayton by the officers of the St. George Society, Hamilton, May 31st, 1880.'"

Mr. F. H. Austin finished shearing his sheep yesterday. He says the wool will compare favorably in weight with the clip of last season. He attributes this fact to the unusual good grazing of last summer and fall, and is of the opinion that wool has decreased instead of increased in weight since the first of January.

Masons began laying the brick walls for the Bennett Bros. block yesterday. The building will be two stories high, with brick and dressed stone front and will be an ornament to that section of Tejon street.

It will be remembered that Thomas Grady, who is known to many in Colorado Springs and who was roadmaster of the Denver and Rio Grande, fell into the South Arkansas river on the 15th instant, in consequence of losing his footing while directing the operations of the men under his charge in the construction of the road. Since that time the most diligent search has been made for the body without avail. A large reward has been offered for its discovery and men have been employed every day in dragging the river below the point where Mr. Grady fell in, but up to the present time no trace has been found of the remains of the unfortunate man.

Arizona's Antiquities.

The following interesting sketch of the antiquities of Arizona appeared in a late issue of the Scientific American and will be found of especial interest to our readers: "The early history of Arizona has still to be written, but it is in most respects identical with that of Southern California, New Mexico and Northern Mexico. That the original inhabitants belonged to the same civilization as that under which Mexico rose to so comparatively high a grade long before Cortes landed on its shores, is usually conceded, but whether the bulk of the people moved southward toward the consolidated empire of the Aztecs before the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards, whether they remained and were swept away by the Spanish invasion from the south; or whether the Apache from the north drove them out of the open lands into the recesses of the canons, and finally extinguished all but the few Pueblos still remaining, is not certainly proven.

Probably the truth lies between the three opinions, and all the causes may have contributed to the depopulation of the country and to the ruin of the extensive cities, dwellings, canals, etc., which strew the plains and line the sides of the canons. To the student of history nothing in Arizona equals in interest these architectural remains. Now that the railway is finished, many of these are comparatively accessible the famous Casa Grande being only a few miles from the station of that name, while numerous other ruins exist in the districts around Florence and Phœnix.

A few miles from Phœnix are the ruins of two or three towns, and the remains of two stupendous canals, one of which is forty feet wide, and in former times drew its supply of water from the river near the mountains, twenty miles distant. In this neighborhood are also the ruins of a building occupying a parallelogram of twenty feet by one hundred and thirty, with walls still over ten feet high. At from twelve to fourteen miles of Phœnix, at La Tempe, are remains of what must have been a populous city, and also another system of canals and reservoirs. Ruins of a similar description to those of Casa Grande have been found in the Rio Verde valley, on Pueblo creek and at Aztec pass.

Casa Grande, discovered by Father Kino, three hundred years ago, is situated near the Gila, a few miles from Florence. The main building is about fifty-five feet square, and four stories in height, with traces of two more stories. Each story contains five rooms, two, thirty-five by ten feet, the other three twenty-four by nine feet, and all of them nine feet in height. The openings which once served for doors are three feet and one-half high, two and one-half wide at the base, and two feet wide at the top. The whole of the interior is neatly plastered, the plaster perfect as when put on. This building is surrounded by a wall, which when perfect, was perhaps fifteen feet high, and six feet thick at the base, and within this are several smaller apartments, besides a watch tower at the southeast and southwest corners.

The towns of the Moqui and Zuni, the former in the north of Arizona, and the latter just over the border in New Mexico, are in so many respects similar to the ruins scattered on plain and canon, that they evidently belong to the same civilization, but whether the Indians are the remains of a separate tribe, or the remnants of many tribes, is one of the problems of the history America.

In the Gila valley, one hundred and twenty miles from Tucson, are the famous Piedras Pintadas. A heap of rocks, about fifty feet high, is covered with rude figures, geometric, comic, anatomical. Here are squares, circles, crosses, triangles, snakes, toads, and vermin; men without heads and dogs without tails. The sketches show considerable similarity to the Aztec Calendar Stone of Mexico. It is a tradition with the Indians that those stones were put in there in the time of Montezuma to record treaties between different tribes.

The "Indians" of Arizona evidently belong to several very different stocks. The wild Apache, formidable for his stealthiness and treachery more than from his numbers; the peaceful, not easily provoked, yet brave Pimo; the industrious Papago, and the town-dwelling, family-loving, orderly, clean, and self-contained Moqui, have little in common.

The distance which separates the rude Apache from the Moqui, with his old and respected civilization, is as great as that between the rude tribes of Siberia and the cultivated Japanese.

The ruins in the canons, on almost inaccessible terraces, are believed, by Major Powell, to be more recent than those of the plains. He believes the people took refuge there to escape the Spanish incursions."

General John A. Sutter, the discoverer of gold in California, was buried at Lititz, Pa. last Thursday. The funeral was attended by delegations of veteran Californians from New York and Philadelphia. The pall-bearers were General John C. Freemont, General H. C. Gibson, D. C. Kemble, J. G. Nuttman, Francis C. Clark, J. Sherwood, J. F. McCloskey, Wm. Walton, Wm. R. Dowling, John Sickels, H. K. Cummings, and S. H. Quint. At the grave General Gibson and General Freemont made eulogistic speeches.

The Brittle Silver mine, located in the Tomichi district, has been sold for $25,000. The purchasers of this property also bought six other claims for $1,500.

OUT WEST.

Kavanagh's boulevard at Leadville, from the city to the soda springs and race track, has been completed.

On the Chrysolite mine 450 men are on the pay roll. The ore product has not yet reached its former daily average, but in a few days it will do so.

The Little Prince, a most promising property on Breece Hill, is to be worked again at an early day, after a suspension of two months. It is a shaft 380 feet deep.

The Saguache Chronicle says: We are informed by different ranchmen along the Saguache creek that their crops looked splendid, and if nothing happens to them they will reap a number one harvest this season.

Large government trains pass through Saguache nearly every day. A large amount of supplies are being taken west to the troops on the reservation. One large train passed through Thursday that came over Poncha pass.

Any time during the present month the seed of Hungarian grass may be sown with a good prospect of securing a crop. It may be sown in land that has been in corn, potatoes, or small grain, or on new making. It is a good crop to grow with a partial view of subduing a tough grass sod. The amount of seed required for an acre is about half a bushel.

The Silver World says: "Lake City wants mechanics who will come on assurance of work at good wages until the close of the season. We do not wish to start a boom and invite a deluge of skilled labor (we have enough of the other kind now) only to be disappointed; but a glance at the local columns of this and future issues for the next four weeks of the Silver World will show that carpenters, bricklayers and plasterers will have plenty of work in this vicinity until the first of October."

A good joke, and one which caused considerable amusement, occurred at the Clarendon hotel in Leadville, recently. It appears that Lieut. Governor Tabor, who is sixth corporal in a military company had not been in attendance upon drill as frequently as a soldier who has the fire of patriotism burning in his heart naturally would be, and several notices had been served upon him requesting his attendance. To this the doughty corporal, contrary to the rules and discipline of war, paid no heed and two guards arrested him and marched him to headquarters.

The Leadville Herald says: "From the Little Pittsburg Consolidated mines, the ore shipments yesterday amounted to seventy-four tons. On Tuesday the amount shipped was seventy-five tons, and on Monday about the same amount. The mine is again coming to the front, and has a large body of ore. The returns from this ore have not yet been received, but the ore is known to be of good grade. To-day there will be a large lot shipped, that assays from 206 to 300 ounces to the ton. The mine is sure yet to prove itself among the most valuable, and not played out as was at first supposed." The Herald never lost confidence in the property.

Gunnison City has about six tents and one cabin, used a postoffice. The people of Aspen have forwarded petitions to Washington asking that a postoffice be established there. It is thought that as soon as Aspen obtains a smelter there will be a rapid increase in the population. At present if you ask a man why he does not work his claim, his answer will be: "Well, what is the use taking out ore when we have no smelter?" Altogether about 150 men are now employed cutting a good wagon road through from Buena Vista to Aspen, when a smelter will at once be erected. By way of the Independence route there is a good wagon road to the foot of the range, whence a three foot trail will be pushed to Aspen, for the use of pack animals, which will be ten miles shorter than the wagon road.
